As a teenager, Peter worked as a principal performer and also held silent on camera roles in different television commercials for major brand names like Wrigley's, Bell and 7up.

In his early twenties, Peter was the host of "Montreal Inside Out" and of "Futurescope" which were two different series of 13 television programs aired on CFCF12.

Later, he was invited to audition for a radio spot on CFQR 92.5FM in Montreal and then worked there on the weekends for over 3 years as an announcer with 65,000 listeners.

During that time and for a few years following, Peter was the voice in various radio commercials for the Quebec government and Parc Safari among others, and in corporate training videos for CN, and Hydro Quebec.

At the age of 30 Peter moved to another side of the business where he worked for Sony Corporation selling professional audio and video equipment used in major studio and field productions.

In 2019 Peter decided to renew his vivid interest behind the microphone and in front of the camera and is now available full time for auditions.
